

5 New San Francisco Bars & Restaurants to Hit Up in February

By Daisy Barringer

January's bar and restaurant openings gave the city something for everyone: a chic new spot for cocktails and stone hearth pizza, a swanky new hotel bar, a Jamaican restaurant that feels like an island vacation, world-famous ramen, and a cool new restaurant on Treasure Island where the food's as good as the views. If the rest of SF's openings in 2018 are as stellar as these, it's going to be a very good year.

Mersea

TREASURE ISLAND

Building with shipping containers is all the rage, and for good reason, as you'll discover when you head to this new all-day Treasure Island restaurant with unobstructed views of the San Francisco skyline. The restaurant was constructed from 13 shipping containers that surround a central courtyard, but whereas you might expect that to feel cold and sterile, it's actually very warm and inviting.

The food follows suit with a menu of comfort food classics, like a fried egg sandwich (breakfast is served until 11am), street tacos, a double stacked cheeseburger, and an orange creamsicle float. There's also a bocce ball court and putting green, which is pretty awesome, except it means you have to take your eyes off of the views...And that's harder to do than you'd think.